The Teacher gazed down into the trusting washed blue eyes of the student.

"I have something of great importance to impart unto you, my Son," he said gently.

"Yes, Master?"

"I must tell you about a great lie that has been perpetrated, and has been paraded before mankind as an eternal truth."

"Yes, Master, what is that?"

"It has been said, and it is written, and it is taught by the Priest that 'God created the heavens and the earth.'"

"That is so, Master... I am aware of this doctrine."

"This, my Son... this 'doctrine' as you call it, is a perversion of the true reality and stands before all as a great lie..."

"A 'great lie', Master?"

The student's voice trembled, and his eyes questioned the Teacher's wise face.

"What then... What then is the true reality, Master?"

"My Son," whispered the Teacher, "you... yes you... you created the heavens and the heavens and the earth..."

When the Priest reported to God that which the Teacher had said and done, the wrath of God waxed hot... and waxed strong... and it was terrible to behold.

God raised His clenched fists to his Holy head, and hissed through his Sacred clenched teeth, "What the hell's going on now? Who does this... this arse-hole of a teacher think he is?"

He lowered his fists slowly and glowered at the Priest.

"I'm God aren't I? So what I say goes... doesn't it?"

"Yes, Lord," answered the cowering Priest quickly.

"It's simple enough, isn't it?" continued God. "I'm God, therefore man must obey... believe in Me... have faith in Me... Worship Me... So... what I say, not what I do... is truth... Isn't it?"

"Yes, Lord, it is."

"So, what's the problem with this... this teacher?"

"I'm afraid he thinks... and he questions..."

"He thinks? ...He questions? ...Me?" roared God.

"Yes, Lord."

God's all-seeing omniscient eyes bulged, and the veins in his omnipotent neck were swollen and throbbing, and God's omnipresent face glowed with a purple apoplectic iridescence...

"Aaaaaaaah," He screamed. "So the man has become as one of us, eh? ... Bugger that for a lark... I'll... I'll flood the bloody lot of 'em..."

AND HE DID!

End
